Originally published in 1897, this book provides an onomasticon of Anglo-Saxon names and the people who bore those names. The text covers a large proportion of English society during the days of the Anglo-Saxon monarchy. It is divided into two parts: the names in part one are derived mainly from historical works and charters; the names in part two, which is much shorter, are the result of a close investigation of later sources. This book will be of value to anyone with an interest in Anglo-Saxon history or historiography.

The result was a large mass of texts and notes assembled over a period of nearly forty years and covering every aspect of local tradition.

ABA Journal CUP Archive For centuries it has been recognized that plants relate to human health and well-being in many ways beyond their fundamental role as primary sources of food and energy. Many of the unique plant constituents have pronounced effects on animal systems or in the human body; some of them are potentially harmful and represent a risk in the use of a particular plant or in the exposure to it, others are useful as medicinal agents in the treatment of diseases. Many of the latter are extracted from plant materials on a large scale for marketing as drugs and even more of them have served as structural prototypes which inspired chemists to synthesize analog drugs with even more desirable properties. Clearly, today's drug therapy had its origins in the exploration and exploitation of pharmacologically active plant constituents. It is therefore appropriate that a symposium of the Phytochemical Society of North America '14 was devoted to this subject. The present volume consists of eleven papers dealing with various aspects of the topic "Phytochemistry as Related to Disease and Medicine", which were presented at the Fourteenth Annual Meeting of the Phytochemical Society of North America held in August 1974 at Hestern Carolina University in Cullowhee, N.C. Plant hallucinogens are the subject of the first three chapters. The first, by Schultes, reviews the occurrence of hallucinogenic agents in plants, in tabular form. Emphasis is on plants from Central and South America.
